PASTOR'S DESK

Some years ago, a religious periodical published the story of an American businessman who had recently returned from a trip to India...

Like so many others who have traveled from their seats of comfort and security to the streets of Calcutta, he was appalled at the sight of so many suffering, literally starving people -- young women and their babies. He had heard about it but had never confronted the reality of it in any serious way. And as he passed one street corner with his group, he happened to glance at one mother, holding her baby, and begging. He saw that both mother and child had all the symptoms of malnutrition. Suddenly, his eyes met the woman's, and they locked. "That young woman's eyes," he said, "were staring right into the depths of my soul. And they were saying to me, 'Bread for my baby, for god's sake. For god's sake, do something.'"

Since that agonizing moment, that man has given much of his time, talent, and experience in several organized efforts to help the starving children in India, Africa and other places around the world. "Whenever I am tempted to think that I've done enough," he says, "that mother's eyes come back to haunt me, and I can hear them saying, 'For God's sake, bread for my baby.' And I know that I must continue."

The great 14th-century Italian artist Jacopo Tintoretto depicted today's Gospel Episode in which Jesus feeds 5,000 followers with five loaves and two fishes in typical Tintoretto fashion. The artist takes this moving, holy event and turns it into a joyous celebration.

Through the years, the great master artists have created many beautiful depictions of the scene in today's Gospel Lesson evoking a range of emotions. And it's important to note that in many of the paintings, the artist emphasizes the role of the disciples in distributing the food to the crowd. And it is for the following reason that I want us to be especially mindful of today: If you are a disciple of Jesus Christ, you are a distributor of the Bread of Life.

Indeed, if you are a disciple of Christ, you are called to take this moving, holy event and turn it into a joyous celebration.

PEACE AND BLESSINGS!

Fr. Luis
